
How does your canned tuna stack up?

1 message

Greenpeace Canada <noreply@mailing.greenpeace.org>
Reply-To: noreply@mailing.greenpeace.org
To:

Mon, Mar 26, 2012 at 4:26 PM

View this email online

Greenpeace Canada E-news March 2012

send this email to a friend so they can subscribe too.

Shop smart, use our interactive tuna guide online

Our second annual canned tuna ranking finds some Canadian brands are joining a growing industry transition towards sustainability.

More canned tuna companies are seeing the need to act for tuna stocks before it's too late, but others continue to ignore the growing consumer demand for tuna that supports healthy oceans. Canada's biggest brand, Clover Leaf, is among this year's laggards.

» Find out more

© Greenpeace

Speaking truth to power on the tar sands

It's not often one has the opportunity to speak truth to power. However, last week Greenpeace Climate and Energy campaigner Melina Laboucan-Massimo was called to testify in front of the U.S. Congress on the terrifying consequences of runaway tar sands expansion.

» Watch her testimony

© Greenpeace

The fashion industry's dirty little secret

Behind the glamour of the catwalk lies a world that those inside the fashion industry do not want you to see: dark, dirty, and founded on a toxic addiction that is slowly destroying our waterways.

» Find out more

© Greenpeace

Rainbow Warrior in the Amazon

The new Rainbow Warrior has embarked on an expedition to highlight the beauty and importance of protecting the planet's largest remaining rainforest. Sail with us through the heart of the Amazon as we cast a global spotlight on environmental issues in the region.

» Find out more

Join us: become a monthly supporter today

Donate

View this email online

Contact Us

Unsubscribe